Mr. Chairman, I instituted at the beginning of last month a survey, writing to every state superintendent in the United States, also to a great number of principals of normal schools, also to quite a number of the superintendents of secondary schools.

On the basis of the returns salaries of nearly 8,000 teachers in New York city are less than the wages paid to anyone of twelve mechanical occupations in the city of Chicago. It is worth, per year, $394 more to carry bricks than to train children, $363 more to mold dough for bread than to mold boys and girls into citizenship reatest republic. In summing up I make the following
